Dear Families,

This week, we will be celebrating Neurodiversity Week in school.

What is Neurodiversity Week?

Neurodiversity Week is a worldwide event that helps people understand that everyone's brain works in different ways. It encourages schools and organisations to recognise and support people who think and learn differently.

Our brains are all unique. This means we all think, learn, move and communicate in our own way. The word neurodiversity is often used to describe different thinking and learning styles, such as Dyslexia, Dyspraxia, Dyscalculia, Autism and ADHD.

Neurodiversity is about valuing people who think differently and recognising their strengths. Around 15-20% of people have a neurological difference, so it is important that we create a school community where everyone feels included and supported.

If you would like more information or useful resources for families, please visit:

Yours sincerely,

Mrs Jayne Davis
